

During this quarter, 2,712 animals were sterilized on our mobile spay/neuter clinics.
Many of the surgeries were performed free of charge for low-income residents.

We've spayed or neutered 156,176 animals since 2001!

PETA's veterinary medical staff performed emergency spay surgeries free of charge to treat Molly's vaginal prolapse and Abby's uterine infection. The surgeries could have cost more than $1,000 each at a private vet clinic, and Abby very likely would have died without this procedure. These dogs were two of 4,306 animals helped by PETA's local services, on which we spent $554,731.64 this quarter.

Our Poochella adoption event turned an average Saturday into a tail-wagging good time that included vendors, grilled veggie burgers and franks, and dozens of dogs from local shelters in search of loving homes.

Ava and 224 other animals got free rides to and from their no-cost spay and neuter appointments.

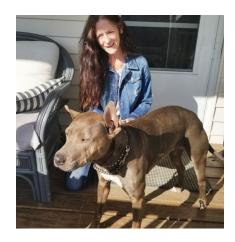

PETA's mobile clinic and humane education staff participated in Career Day at an elementary school, and our local outreach staff attended a Community Fun Day in Norfolk.

Our mobile clinic staff also treated a dog named Baby for an ear infection during her spay appointment, all at no cost to her guardians.

Layla's family was among the 251 counseled and aided with regard to keeping their animals. Our clinic staff treated her for an ear infection.

This mother dog and her two puppies, who were infested with fleas and kept in a small pen that was only cleaned when PETA staffers visited, were among the 170 animals surrendered to PETA and transferred to other Virginia shelters for adoption.

One of the 610 calls for assistance that we received this quarter was for a cat named Baby. We provided her with transportation to the clinic as well as veterinary care for a severe ear infection, all free of charge.

Robo, whose only shelter from the pouring rain was some broken, discarded furniture, is one of 75 "backyard dogs" who received a sturdy new doghouse, courtesy of PETA's free doghouse program.

We found Moo chained and immobile, with heavy, labored breathing and a painfully distended abdomen. He was dying of suspected congestive heart failure, the result of an advanced heartworm infestation. His owner wasn't home at the time and was unreachable by phone. Despite our calls to every law-enforcement agency available, nobody would respond in order to help Moo. Our fieldworker stayed with him for hours in muggy, 80-degree weather until his owner finally returned and agreed that euthanasia was the kindest option for him. He was one of the 401 animals we euthanized this quarter.

We also euthanized 168 feral cats suffering from conditions including advanced upper respiratory infections and neurological disorders as well as bloody nasal discharge, infected wounds, eye injuries, labored breathing, missing teeth, abrasions, ruptured tumors, and prolapsed organs. They were brought to PETA by some of the 75 people referred to us by other area sheltering agencies and veterinary clinics. The feral cats we help come from jurisdictions that don't offer any services for them at all. The skin of this feral cat's face was necrotic and sloughing off, likely the result of a ruptured abscess following a suspected attack by another animal.

When Anna, an elderly, blind border collie, had become aggressive and incontinent, was unable to keep weight on, and began having seizures, her guardians asked PETA to relieve her of her misery.

After Stella had stopped eating and was diagnosed with a very painful splenic tumor, her guardian called PETA for help with endof-life care. Stella was one of 140 animals we euthanized free of charge for families who couldn't afford to pay for this vital service at a private veterinary clinic.

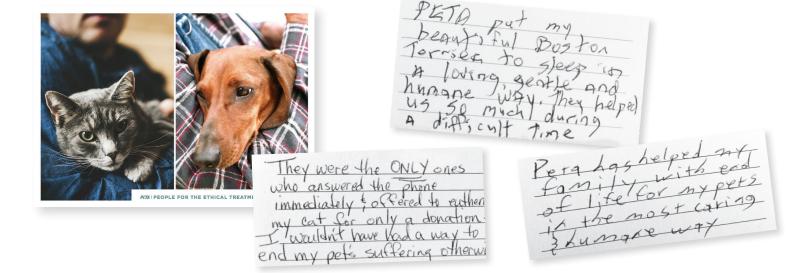

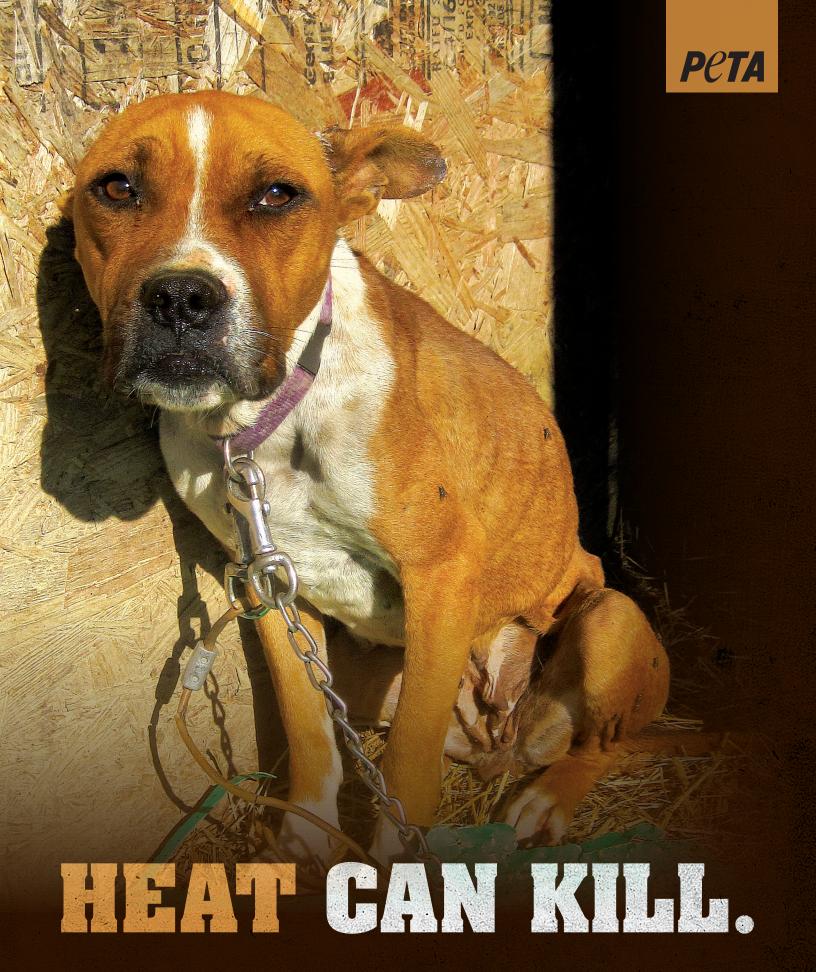

After a concerned staffer at a local motel alerted us to a guest's elderly, blind, emaciated dog who could hardly stand, we discussed Cassie's quality of life with her owner, who then asked us to help her with end-of-life care.

GRATITUDE FROM PEOPLE WE HELPED

After we provided Pepper, a dog with a large malignant tumor, with end-of-life care, his guardians filled out postcards asking their state representatives to protect PETA's ability to offer such services. This quarter, 651 of these postcards were sent to our constituent families' legislators.
